

ARTICLE APPEARED
ON PAGE A12

THE WASHINGTON POST
25 March 1981

AROUND THE WORLD

Former Politician Named as Spy

LONDON — The Daily Mail newspaper said today former Labor member of Parliament and party chairman Tom Driberg had been a double agent spying for both British and Soviet intelligence.

Journalist Chapman Pincher, who earlier this week named Sir Roger Hollis, a former head of British counterintelligence, as a probable Soviet agent, named Driberg in the latest extract from his forthcoming book dealing with British espionage secrets.

Pincher said that for 30 years Driberg, who died in 1976, reported to both Britain's counterespionage service, MI5, and to the Soviet KGB on the private lives and political activities of parliamentary colleagues and friends. "Both MI5 and the KGB had no illusions about the fact that he was working for the other side," Pincher wrote.